ADJOURNING POLITICS ABROAD.

In what Americans, trained and accustomed to practical politics, would call the "caucusing" preliminary to the actual assembling of the world's peace conference, indications multiply that economic questions must take precedence over political issues. The urgency of a common human need throughout the world will not brook delay. The theoretical international peace conference faces the practical internationalism of hunger. The Soviet of empty stomachs and bare backs demands first consideration. That the delegates to the conference recognize this is shown by the prominence given in preliminary discussion to measures of human relief, says Chicago Daily News. It is found more important to know whether Mr. Hoover will accept the burden of world food distribution than whether the ex-kaiser has any legal right to remain in Holland. The problem of employment of the world's armies in constructive work is just now more vital than decisions as to boundaries and forms of government. Perhaps after the stage is cleared of these imminent and urgent matters it will be discovered that politics, boundaries, rulers and the forms of administration have been greatly simplified and lend themselves to adjustment upon the recognized basis of humanity rather than upon the outworn doctrine of a too narrow nationalism.

James Russell Lowell is said to have confessed to John Fluke in his later life that he had lost all relish for higher literature and only cared for tales of wild adventure and detective stories. The elderly Harvard alumnus who vouches for this also says that Tennyson was affected in the same way as the result of years spent in lofty contemplation. Other authority has it that Mr. Taft and President Wilson find relaxation in detective stories. By the way, did anyone ever hear of the reverse of this procedure—a turning to lofty contemplation in their late years by persons who look to detective literature in early life? Is it a rule that works both ways?

Herr President Ebert's government is figuring on a plan for paying off the German debt. It expects to begin by seizing all war profits, this to be followed in time by taking over all "swollen" fortunes. In effect, the new German scheme will not only levy high taxes for a time, but will virtually abolish inheritance, says Omaha Bee. Nationalization of industry and socialization of wealth will provide means for settling with creditors, as well as removing a source of worry to the government. When no citizen has great wealth, the bolshevik will have less to envy.

The unearthing of a blue-white diamond from a South African mine, one of the largest ever discovered and perhaps the most valuable, is a find of some interest and importance. But just at this time the world is prepared to welcome with more joy a new oil gusher, a new coal field, or a few added acres that can be planted to wheat.

THE SUPERCARGO.

The United States shipping board announces the revival of the ancient and honorable title, office and emoluments of "supercargo." Readers of sea tales of a bygone period will recall such a personage. The supercargo formerly owed his position to the circumstances that deep-sea ships made trading voyages beyond the reach of communications, sometimes being gone for a year or more. The supercargo went along as the personal representative of the owners, to sell or barter the cargo to the best advantage. The sailors were apt to look upon him as an irascible landlubber, and because of the strain of constant companionship on a protracted voyage he and the skipper would often fall out. Voyages nowadays are made more swiftly, and to definite ports, with the sale of the cargo of no concern to the shipowner, while the return cargo is likely to be arranged for in advance. And the cable and wireless are always available for conversation or instructions. But the shipping board is confident it can make supercargoes useful. A "force" of them will be organized to sail on its ships as "accredited officers of the United States government."

World's Hottest Places.

The Sahara desert, between parallels 10 and 0, is considered to be the hottest place in the world, but Hyperabad, in Sid desert in India, is even hotter. In summer months it is said the temperature there often rises above 125 degrees in the shade.
